Warſaw, November 4.

IF the Almighty by his Providence had not interfered, a Gang of the moſt deſperate Villains would have perpetrated an Act which all true Poles would have read in their Annals with Horror and Aſtoniſhment. Yeſterday Evening about Nine o'Clock, as the King was returning in his Coach to his Palace, from the Great Chancellor's, Prince Czartoczinſky, his Majeſty was ſuddenly attacked at the Corner of the Capuchin-Street, near the Biſhop of Cracow's Palace, by ſix Confederates, headed by a Captain of Horſe, named Koczinſky, who had formerly been in the Service of Prince Czartorinſky, but is now one of the Confederates. His Majeſty not being attended by his uſual Eſcort of Uhlans, but only accompanied by ſome Pages and Servants, the Aſſaſſins ſtopped the Coach, and immediately diſcharged their Carbines and Piſtols, ſeveral of the Balls going through the Coach. Two Heyducks, who were behind the Coach with Flambeaux, immediately leaped down to defend it; one of whom was deſperately wounded, and ſoon after expired; the other received ſeveral Wounds from a Sabre. An Aide du Camp, who was in the Coach with the King, and a Page, were wounded, and nothing belonging to his Majeſty was found but his Hat. This happened in one of the moſt inhabited Parts of the Town, ſo that the greateſt Alarm was occaſioned among the People, who ran out on the firſt Noiſe, and the Troops of the Crown and the Ruſſians, who were patroling in all Parts, came up, but could not trace the Road the Villains had taken. All that could be found was the King's bloody Hat, which cauſed an univerſal Conſternation for his Majeſty's Life. In the mean Time, Koczinſky and his Gang had joined twenty-five other Confederates, who were poſted at the Corner of a Street waiting the Event. As ſoon as they had dragged the King out of his Coach, they took him between two Horſemen, holding him by the Hands, and drew him in that Manner by the Arſenal over the Naliuze out of the City beyond Bilano, a German Mile and Half from Warſaw. They now found, by the Shouts they heard, that the Ruſſians were in Purſuit of them; whereupon Koczinſky, either through Fear, or Remorſe of Conſcience, deſired the Captain of the Horſe, who commanded this deſperate Party, to retire to ſome Diſtance with the greateſt Number of them, thinking that otherwiſe they could not fail to be ſoon diſcovered; which Deſire the Captain complied with, and left his Majeſty in the Hands of Koczinſky and four others; which four however Koczinſky preſently after contrived to get rid of by ſending them to ſee how near the Ruſſians were come. He then threw himſelf at the King's Feet, and implored Pardon, with the ſtrongeſt Aſſurances that he would carry his Majeſty back ſafely to Warſaw. He produced a Paper, in which he was bound with the others by the ſtrongeſt Oaths, (which Tranſaction paſſed at Czenſtochau) to deliver the King, dead or alive, to the Confederates. He received his Majeſty's Pardon, and then led the King out of the Road amongſt the Buſhes by Bilano. After they had travelled an Hour in the Dark and exceſſive bad Roads, they arrived at a poor Cottage, where his Majeſty threw himſelf down quite exhauſted on a miſerable Bed, and fell aſleep. From hence Advice was ſent to General Cocceii, who came immediately with a Party of Horſe, and had the Pleaſure to lodge his Majeſty, about Four in the Morning, ſafe in the Caſtle. His Majeſty, beſides the imminent Danger of his Life, had every Diſtreſs to combat with, and this aggravated by two Wounds on his Head, one by a Sabre, and the other by a Piſtol-Ball, which only grazed.

As the Alarm and Conſternation had been very great, ſo it is not eaſy to expreſs the Joy every one felt at knowing his Majeſty was once again ſafe in the Caſtle. A general Thankſgiving was offered up to God for the Preſervation of his Majeſty's precious Life, and Te Deum celebrated in all the Churches, with the Diſcharge of 100 Cannon. The Conſpirators had been in the City ſome Days, having got in by means of ſome Waggons laden with Hay, but had not been able to find an Opportunity of getting Poſſeſſion of the King's Perſon till the Evening this execrable Scheme was put in Execution, as above related.
